Impostor's Lure, Carla Neggers Tamara headed toward the street, her ankles swollen, no doubt from the heat and humidity, as she crossed the brick-paved wharf, passing more boats and empty slips. She took a water bottle from her tote bag and when she reached the street, turned left, picking up her pace and quickly disappearing from view.

the latest lure, experts say. Scammers spin a story to make it appear credible and target people's "emotional buttons" to make money, said said Gleb Tsipursky, a professor at Ohio State University who studies the circulation of fake news on social media. The contentious gun debate in the U.S. might make the matter worse.
